Foreword

This directory lists 2,675 farmers markets--an astonishing growth from fewer than 100 markets just two decades ago, and even from the 1,755 listed in the first directory published in 1994. This phenomenal growth is clear evidence of the ability of American agriculture to be dynamic and to accommodate innovation in marketing strategies by American farmers.

Farmers markets are just one example of a renewed interest in farmer direct marketing activity. The vitality of small and medium-sized farms is good for the local economy, good for consumers, and good for society as a whole. The reason is simple--diversity provides a strength that homogeneity cannot. Consumers benefit from the freshness, quality, and wide selection of locally grown products. And the opportunity to meet and interact with the farmer who grows the food develops a bond of trust in the integrity and accountability of the grower. Society benefits by being able to maintain green space created by sustaining farms near population centers. Farmers markets create an opportunity for city dwellers to meet growers and gain an appreciation of farming and the heritage it represents for all of us. Many communities are finding it rewarding to invest in local markets as a component of economic development and are realizing benefits from resulting tourism.

At USDA, we are proud of our involvement in farmers markets, and the rewards they offer for producers, consumers, and rural and urban communities. Farmers markets are also an important means for accomplishing USDA's mission to ensure that all Americans have access to reasonably priced, high-quality, and nutritious foods. In particular, farmers markets offer opportunities for low-income families to obtain high-quality, reasonably priced fresh fruits and vegetables; and the same opportunities for inner-city residents whose access to such products has been significantly diminished because larger, traditional retail outlets have abandoned these locations due to congestion and space costs.

Over the years, the Agricultural Marketing Service (AMS) has significantly increased its farmer direct marketing activities. For the third consecutive year, we held a farmers market at USDA headquarters in Washington, D.C. This year, the market was open weekly, as opposed to bi-weekly in previous years. Also last year, the success of farmers markets quickly spread to other Federal facilities in Washington, and this year, continued to expand to Federal facilities throughout the country.

Recently, AMS held a farmers market symposium, in which farmers, market operators, State officials, academics, and others came to Washington to offer their insights and suggestions on future directions that USDA and AMS could take to enhance our support of farmers markets. We are increasing public access to information on farmers markets as quickly as possible, through electronic distribution. The USDA/AMS farmers market home page can be found at: <http://www.ams.usda.gov/farmersmarkets>. We have also developed a prototype farmers market web site with the California Federation of Farmers Markets. That web site address is: <http://farmersmarket.ucdavis.edu>. We will continue to provide more information developed by AMS on the World Wide Web to anyone interested in accessing information on farmers markets and farmer direct marketing activities.

We are extremely pleased to offer this latest directory of farmers markets, as evidence of a growing and vigorous rural farming sector interacting with local communities in positive ways, for mutual benefits. We welcome your comments and suggestions.

Introduction

Farmers markets, as presented in this directory, are defined as a group of farmers and vendors leasing or renting space in a common facility/site on a temporary basis with an emphasis on the sale of fresh farm products and other locally produced items. This directory is intended to provide an informative resource for farmers, operators, consumers, and the general public. The directory lists 2,746 markets by name, location, contact person, telephone number, and type of operation (open-air/seasonal or year-round) and points out markets that accept WIC (Special Supplemental Nutrition Program for Women, Infants, and Children) coupons and/or participate in food gleaning and recovery. Year-round generally (but not always) denotes that some type of covered facilities exist at the market site. The address of a market listed in this publication usually depicts market location and does not necessarily represent a complete mailing address. Therefore, attempts to contact markets listed in this directory should be made by telephone, if possible. The reader may note that, in some instances, either the last names of contact persons are missing or no name is listed. However, all information received from State departments of agriculture and farmers market organizations has been included in the directory.

The directory will be updated on a regular basis. Suggestions, comments, or market data corrections may be submitted to the following address:
